ANDREW, THE ANT FARMER – BIG CITY ADVENTURE

Andrew, The Ant Farmer BiG City Adventure

by Susan Lantz Conder
Illustrated by Jack Lantz

EARTH DAY – Apr 22, 2012

Susan Lantz Conder and Jack Lantz tell a tall tale that is a small tale. This is a story of a teen-age Ant and his quest for identity. This eBook encourages children to read along because the words change color as the saga is narrated. Pages can be turned manually or played automatically.

It may be surprising to discover that Ant society has some of the same issues and a desire to find your own identity that face our own children and families today. A “bug’s-eye” view of the world, brilliantly rendered and ingeniously interpreted by Jack Lantz, the BiG City never looked more distinguished in this Ant-thropomorphic adventure.

There are life-lessons to be learned in a young ant’s struggle to make his own way. A willingness to work hard is not all that it takes to be a success in this world. Many other factors come into play as a person, or an ant finds his or her true path to meaning.

This is a wonderful example of the new enhanced eBook format. It includes audio files and the ability to zoom in to inspect the enchanting details rendered in the illustrations. There are many pleasant surprises contained therein. You can view a sample video on the iPub-Press website HERE:
